Dear Tim,

Thank you for being a member of ITE! Our community of transportation professionals has surpassed 18,000 strong, enabling us to offer more programs than ever to further your professional development, expand networking opportunities, and advance the state of the industry.

Throughout this past year in my speeches, columns, and articles, I've often said, "People matter." ITE's greatest strength is our members—dedicated professionals like you who invest in their careers and turn to ITE for solutions and connections. Your commitment to the field of transportation and your professional development, and contributions to our community have not gone unnoticed.

Before joining the ITE staff, I was a member for more than 30 years. and I understand how consuming the demands of your day job can be. At times, it can be difficult to engage with a professional association. But I found that being a part of a supportive network like ITE was even more crucial when those daily demands mounted. During those times, I leaned harder into my ITE membership for solutions, ideas, innovation, and people who could help me succeed personally and professionally

ITE is here to provide those resources, opportunities, and connections to propel your career forward and serve as a valuable asset in your day-to-day work. In the past few years, you may have noticed that we've expanded our member benefits, offering more than 50 free webinars each year, an extensive list of New Resources such as Informational Reports, Quick Bites, and Technical Briefs, and innovative tools like the ITE Traffic Wiki, the ITE Photo Exchange, and the ITE Speaker Directory. You can engage with fellow members through our Districts, Sections, Councils, and Committees. The ITE Journal remains a vital resource for sharing technical and organizational knowledge, and our training courses are second-to-none. Meetings and events, whether virtual or in-person, have returned with much greater participation. Overall, the benefits continue to increase!

Throughout my visits around the country this past year, I've said that ITE's Districts and Sections are truly the engine that keeps ITE running. Their many different networking and professional development opportunities provide something for everyone, and if you haven't engaged locally in the past year, you are missing out! And the turbo boost to that engine – the extra value – is the opportunity to also engage in our Councils and Committees at the international level. We have employer-focused Councils for Public Agencies, Consultants, and Industry members. We also have an Education Council supporting academia and cross-cutting committees focused on equity, data, and ethics. Our technical Councils are organized by five key topic areas: Complete Streets, Planning, Traffic Engineering, Safety, and Transportation System Management and Operations. And each of those five Councils has one or more committees diving a layer or two deeper into the subject area. By participating in these activities, you'll
